The Camden Journal is one of the most amusing papers published: we wish it would arrive more regularly. "Those Jackson pun masters" are too fond of a good joke to let it pass through their hands. Reporter.

We say in sober earnestness to Mr. Daniels, of the Camden Journal, "leave that vile habit of punning,—it will some day or other bring you into trouble"—though why we cannot say: it should give no offence to others if as well done as the following:

"Married at Baltimore, Mr. Thomas J Halfpenny to Miss Matilda N. Alden. There are plenty of environs persons who will be ready enough to call this affair 'small change!' Let them have their fun out. We, who look upon western matrimonial more considerately, think it a great change; and, as the bridegroom has made the addition of a "better half" to his possessions, there can be little doubt that the estate is doubled, which every body will acknowledge a fair way to "turn a penny."—Camden Journal.

The persons alluded to are four hundred miles from the offending wight of an editor; and we dare say that, at a distance, Mr. and Mrs. Half-penny smile, as think themselves "free for-things" for Daniels' puns.—Phil. U. S. Gazette.

CURES FOR THE CHOLERA.

Philagistic—Drink lots of brandy—always take care to have the bottle within reach—be sure to keep a bottle in constant requisition, boiling hot, ready for use, immediately after a mouthful of punch—the instant you are attacked, take to it—do not delay a moment. Use the remedy without procrastination—apply it hot.

Anti-Philagistic—Use no spirits in any shape—they are mortal poison. Taken plain, immediate poison—taken diluted, slow poison. Drink coffee, and go to bed.

Philagistic—Eat a mutton chop, or a dozen of them if you can. Get through five meals a day. Be carnivorous in all. Victual the garrison, and defy the foreign invader.

Anti-Philagistic—Avoid the immediate use of animal food. Eat sparingly and temperately.—If you can subsist upon a single meal, do so. Observe this in all the countries where the cholera has appeared, the people have escaped, solely on account of their temperance.

Philagistic—You might as well say it was solely because they dwelt in old clothes. Look to India, first and the rice-eating kindred, then the better fed, but not full fed, Musselmen; then, last of all, the beef-eating generations of Old England.

Anti-Philagistic—But it was the beef-eating men who carried the disorder into Europe. Be cleanly in your person, in your house, and in your streets.

Philagistic—Be, therefore, much unlike the Jews who have, you say, escaped the cholera. I do not prescribe for people who are to be warned against the impurity of wearing a dirty shirt; and I leave the care of the streets to the scavengers.—Use water by all means, externally, as copiously as you like. Beware only of the introduction of that noxious fluid into your stomach.

Anti-Philagistic—Carefully avoid all places and persons where contagion may be supposed to exist. Keep an anxious watch to guard against the approach of the disease. Remember that prevention is better than remedy.

Philagistic—Take no thought about it at all—Set down what you read in the newspapers as three fourths lies, and one fourth exaggeration. Go about in all directions with a jolly heart, knowing that cowardice is the ally of all disease, and that courage is its sworn foe.

Anti-Philagistic—Immediately send for a doctor, and be careful to follow his remedies

Philagistic—Avoid a doctor as you would avoid the plague itself—throw his bottles out of the window, and follow them if you please. Take for granted that humbug is the basis of medicine, and that its practice consists in throwing substances, of which you know little, into a body of which you know less. Is it Borrhaave, or Celsus, or Hippocrates, who says

Punch cures the gout, the cholic and the phthisic.

Anti-Philagistic—Whoever says it, ought to be set down as one of the prime poisoners of mankind. I say he wins in time.

Philagistic—I say he merry at all times.

* * * * *

Such is the substance of a conversation which I lately overheard. I had no time to remain any longer; but I believe that the whole matter of the controversy now going forward in the medical world, respecting the fit treatment of cholera, is summed up pretty accurately in the opinions delivered above.

A FIGHT.

A crowd of British worthies having assembled at an alehouse to get rid of their Christmas hogs, a violent dispute arose between a hackney coachman and lamplighter, about which of them was dressed in the most genteelest manner; words soon became so violent, that the quarrel could terminate only in a battle, and the whole party adjourned to Moorfields, where the crowd soon increased the combatants stripped—

Amid the circle now the champion stands,
And poises high in air his iron hands;
Hurling defiance now they fiercely close,
Their cracking jaws re-echo to the blows.

WATCHMAKER. Go it, my boys; that's the motion—spring at him, seal up his eyes; d—n me, finish him.

SAILOR. Knock out his starboard eye; run in under the guns; get into his wake. Never mind lee shores; douse his glims; shiver his mizen, give him a broadside

SHOEMAKER. Now my lad of wax; peg away; tan the dog's hide; curry him well, that's my good sole; bristle up to him again Jack; leather him soundly; now you have him fast in the stocks

FIDDLER. Lick him to some tune—now he quavers.

BRICKLAYER. Give it to him in his upper story; strike his scaffolding; trowel the dog

CARPENTER. Box him well—glue up his eyes.

TOBACCONIST. Smoke him.

BOOKSELLER. Tap him a second edition of Mendoza—let out his red ink.

GLAZIER. Darken his daylights—that's my diamond; batter his window frames; make the sun shine through him.

BAKER. Peg his dough—hit him in the bread basket—paste up his eyes—give it to him in the crumb

TAILOR. Stick to his shirts—trim his jacket—lace him—sim at his fifth button—have the other brush—let him see you are a man.

APOTHECARY. Pound the dog—bleed him—give him a dose—damn me sicken him.

BARBER. Lather away Dick—shave him close, work him a good two penn orth—dress him, dust him, pin him down tight—beat him to powder—that's the barber.

BLACKSMITH. Hammer away—ply briskly—make his anvil ring again—blow him up, Jack.

UNDERTAKER. Dry the dust. Send him to his long home, take the right route.

AUCTIONEER. He's going—knock him down.

BUTCHER. Have a good heart—come Ben Bozzle over his jaw bone—give him a cross buttock—fix the dog alive—knock out his liver—brine him—break every bone in his skin.

WATERMAN. Break his scull—bring him down upon his bum-boat—ply your blows quick, very fair.

REMARKABLE BALLOON ASCENSION.—It is rumored that a dashing belle residing in a town, which we do not think proper to mention, a few weeks since met with an unpleasant adventure, which was very nearly proving fatal in its effects. She was promenading on the banks of a river, accompanied by a Gentleman, two female cousins and a little dog of the Spaniel species—we love to be particular) when a sudden gust of wind inflated the enormous sleeves of her dress, and became immediately invested with all the properties of highly rarified air. She was suddenly lifted from the ground, to the surprise and horror of her companions, mangre all her agonizing shrieks and prayers for assistance, and wafted high in the air; a sportsman in a neighboring grove, hearing her cries, stepped forth, and perceiving her dilemma—with great presence of mind, took deliberate aim at one of her sleeves; the bullet sped—passed through the sleeve of her head, and perforating the balloon, the air rushed out and she was precipitated from a fearful height into the water—and had not the other sleeve floated her buoyantly on the surface, she must have perished before assistance arrived. She escaped however with no other inconvenience than a slight cold—but was troubled with a hoarseness for several days after the alarming accident.—Exeter News-Letter.

A young officer of the national guard has just received a check which will probably cure him of gallantry for life. He had tormented the pretty wife of a dyer during a long time with letters and compliments, followed her about like her shadow, and at last became so terribly importunate, that she revealed the affair to her husband, who desired her to give him an appointment. Hardly had the conference began, when the dyer and several of his workmen appeared, and seizing the unhappy lover gave him a good souse in a tub of indigo. Then in order that the dye might be solid and durable, they made him stand before a large fire till he was entirely dry. Unfortunately, he was obliged to attend parade the next day, and in consequence he made such plentiful use of soap and eau de Cologne that the tint of indigo disappeared but it was to give place to a beautiful sky blue

A mechanic in the North has invented a machine for sermonizing, which, by means of steam, not only warms the room but flogs all the boys on a graduated scale, according to their offences!

We wish the same mechanic would invent a machine for paying notes when short of cash

A French Physician has published a considerable volume on the effects of Gold. He mentions several ways of taking it, and among other effects ascribed to it, he says it produces an exhilaration of the spirits. Of this last effect we have no doubt, if taken in the pockets.—Augusta Courier.

INFLUENZA.—The Salina Courier says, "if there is power in Congress, we hope they will send the Influenza to the court of Russia, as Embassador Extraordinary, and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Cholera Morbus"

THE YANKEE IN ENGLAND.

Jonathan Lamson was a genuine Yankee—a cute, awkward, whistling, hard-fisted six-footer He was the delight of his native town—had as many accomplishments as a hat has tails, was up to every thing; danced all night, worked all day, swopped watches, licked all the boys, kissed all the girls, and was one-and-twenty!

Jonathan had a magnificent opinion of "luck,"—ten dollars in money, a huge brass watch, and brazen impudence. He worked at all trades—made shingles, cleaned watches, whirled a sledge-hammer, and nunufactured clocks, boots, and shoes; he fiddled too, and danced and peddled so he grew tired of "sick confinement," set off "down east" to "try his fortin"—and found himself a stranger, without employ and moneyless, on the shores of Old England!!

But Jonathan was not a chap to be so easily discouraged; and finding a barber just defunct, stepped into his shop—married his widow, and wrote over his door in large letters with chalk, "Jonathan Lamson from America, Barber, Dentist, and Hair-Dresser,—Watches cleaned, and Boots Mended"—and found himself overrun with business.

Now we know, that in England "division of labor," is carried to a prodigious extent—that a man that makes a boot never mends one, and he that cobbles a shoe never makes either A dozen men labor on every pin, heading, pointing, leading, polishing, sticking, &c. so that a human being—immortal—reasonable, may spend his whole life in pointing needles or sticking on pin-heads!

Imagine then how such a multiplicity of occupations shocked their sense of propriety! They wondered at his natiens, doubted his sanity—swore, laughed, and employed him He pocketed his expences, kept mute as a guide post—rolled over his tobacco quid, and squinted his left eye, as if to say, "my name is Jonathan Lamson."

Nevertheless he was determined to have his revenge—to let them know that two strings to a bow are sometimes better than one—and he selected for his object a pursy old gentleman irresistant in jokes and profound in laughter, who was just sitting down to experience his tonsorial skill—so he lathered him duly and dexterously, to the right and to the left, and held up his glass to let him examine the result.

"Ah! decently done Jonathan, for a Yankee But do they heat their razors in hot water in your country?"

"Razors! we never use razors!" replied Jonathan, looking as innocent as an owl

"What! and how do you shave then?" with a preparatory chuckle, ready to explode in a horse laugh at his simplicity.

"Oh Sir! you mistake my occupation! I only barber!!! just step into the next street and I guess as how you'll get shaved!!!"

WRITE WRITTEN RIGHT.

Write, we know is written right,
When we see it written, write;
But when we see it written right,
We know 'tis then not written wright.
For write to have it written right
Must not be written right or wright,
But write should be written rite,
But write, for so is written right.

POSTSCRIPT TO COUNT ROMZAY OF PARIS.—The gentle reader is acquainted, that there are in all probability, the last tales it will be the lot of the author to utile it to the public

He is now on the eve of visiting foreign parts a mode of war is contemplated by its Royal Master to carry the author of Waverly to climates in which he may possibly obtain such a restoration of his health as may serve him to spin his thread to an end in his own country

Had he continued to prosecute his usual literary labours, it seems indeed probable, that at the term of years he has already attained, the bowl, to use the pathetic language of scripture, would have been broken at the fountain; and little can one, who has enjoyed on the whole an uncommon share of the most inestimable worldly blessings, be entitled to complain, that life, adhering to its period, should be attended with its usual proportions of shadows and stems. They have affected him at least in no more painful manner that, in unwilling from the discharge of this part of the debt of humanity Of those whose relation to him in the ranks of life might have insured him their sympathy under indisposition, many are now no more, and those who may yet follow in his wake, are entitled to expect, in bearing inevitable evils, an example of firmness and patience more especially on the part of one who has enjoyed no small good fortune during the course of his pilgrimage

The public have claims on his gratitude, for which the author of Waverly has no adequate mean of expression, but he may be permitted to hope, that the powers of his mind such as they are, may not have a different date from those of his body, and that he may again meet his patronizing friends if not in his old fashion of literature, at least in some branch, which may not call forth the remark, that—

PRIVY COUNSELLORSHIPS. Mr Gait's Laws of the Players furnishes an example of pointed brevity rarely matched Were it as uncopiable in other respects as it is laudable for its direct and unembarrassed approach to and disposal of the matter in hand, it might be advantageously noted as a model for many who use the pen.—"At the end of the season for 1748, Quin having taken some offence at the conduct of Rich the manager, retired in a fit of resentment from London to Bath, although then under engagements to him Rich, who knew that Quin would not be brought round by entreaty, thought to gain him back by contempt And when Quin who, having indulged his spleen, began to repent, and in his penitence wrote him in these words—

"I am at Bath. QUIN."

The answer was as laconic though not quite so civil

"Stay there, and be d—d. RICH"

This reply, it has been well said, cost the public one of the greatest ornaments on the stage for Quin, on receiving it, took a firm resolution of never engaging again with 'so insolent a block head!'"

At a supper which closed the annual meeting of the Columbia Typographical Society, held at Washington, D. C on the 21st January, Mr. Verplanck, a representative of this city in Congress related the anecdote

"I was engaged some years ago in a miscellaneous literary work in conjunction with two or three friends whose writings are amongst the most valued productions of native literature The volumes were made accurately as well as very beautifully printed Before the sheets had reached the binder, and long before they had fallen under the eyes of any regular editorial critic, I was surprised with a review of the work in one of our best, and most widely circulated literary journals. It was written with great talent, as well as elegance and spiritfulness of style, and in the most friendly spirit On inquiring for the name of our good-natured and able critic, the authors were surprised to learn that he was the compositor who had set up the whole of the manuscript, and who knew it only in that way Our friend has since laid down the stick for the pen, and is now, as I trust, winning his way to fame and fortune in another country."

BIRTH-DAY OF WASHINGTON.

Not with the shout of War,
Our vallies ring to day;
The song of Peace is heard afar—
And Freedom's everlasting star
Illumes our way.

Tis not the famine cry—
The wail of misery,—
The stream of plenty floweth high;
The eagle-banner greets the sky
From every one.

What cause hath gathered so,
The humble and the proud?
For home and country do they go,
To battle with th' invading foe,
That countless crowd?

Hark—like a swelling flood,
Their shout comes rushing by,—
Hail to the chieftain—he hath stood
Unshaken, amid seas of blood,
For Liberty

'Tis hushed. A voice hath come,
The watchword of the free;
It echoth in the lofty dome—
'Tis whispered in the patriot's home—
"His Memory"

They hear it; they who bow
To draw Oppression's breath—
From land to land it passeth now
'Tis spoken with the fearful vow—'
"Freedom or Death."

Even now the nations break
That galling chain. They pour
Forth to the field. How dear the stake—
Home—freedom—country. Aye: they wake
To sleep no more.

Kings hasten to the fight.
Wo! for their doom draws on;
The eye of Vengeance flashes bright,
And terrible as Heaven's own light,
His sword is drawn.

But, lo! above the cloud
Of conflict and dismay,
Columbia's star No gloom can shroud
It rafiant beam; or veil its proud
Immortal way.

When Addison became secretary of state, his old school mistress, being far advanced in years, grew very deaf. A friend, who one day called upon her, told her that her little favorite was now a great man, and a great writer "Ay, (said she) I always said Joey was born to be a great man; he was a mighty clever boy, and a deal of pains I took with him do you know that before he left me he read very near as well as I did! but pray what has he written?" "Why, the Spectators" "The Sectators!—speak a little louder, pray" "The eight volumes of the Spectators" "Dear me! dear me! eight volumes about potatoes! what could he find to say!" But I always said Joey was a clever boy"

EXPLOITS OF PUTNAM,

As recorded in the veracious History of Connecticut, by Rev Sam. Peters.

The wonderful exploits of General Putnam, as related by other historians, are but trifling and commonplace, compared with the version of them given in Peters' History of Connecticut. The story of the bear is altogether more heroic than that of the wolf, inasmuch as the exploit was performed by himself alone, in the dead of night, and with the primitive weapon so much used by Hercules, to wit, a club The going over the falls supposes any thing that has fallen from the pens of his professed biographers; and his hanging three days on a tree without food, is a matter of fact that many a writer, a little fastidious about the truth, might have hesitated to relate. But listen to the Rev. historian

"We read that David slew a lion and a bear, and afterwards that Saul trusted him to fight Goliah In Pomfret lives Col Israel Putnam, who slew a she bear and her two cubs with a billet of wood The bravery of this action brought him into public notice and it seems he is one of fortune's favorites. The story is as follows —In 1751, a large she bear came in the night from her den, which was three miles from Mr. Putnam's house, and took a sow out of a pen of his The sow, by her squeaking, awoke Mr. Putnam, who hastily ran to the poor creature's relief, but before he could reach the pen, the bear had left it, and was trotting away with the sow in her mouth. Mr. Putnam took up a billet of wood, and followed the screamings of the sow, till he came to the foot of the mountain where the den was. Immediately he entered the horrid cavern, and after walking and crawling upon his hands and knees for fifty yards, came to a roomy cell, where the bear met him with great fury. He saw nothing but the fire of her eyes; but that was sufficient for our hero; he accordingly directed his blow, which at once proved fatal to the bear and saved his own life at a most critical moment. Putnam then discovered and killed two cubs; and having, though in Egyptian darkness, dragged them and the dead sow, one by one, out of the cave, he went home, and calmly reported to his family what had happened The neighbors declared, on viewing the place by torchlight, that his exploit exceeded those of Samson of David Soon afterwards the General Assembly appointed Mr. Putnam a Lieutenant in the army marching against Canada. His courage and good conduct raised him in the rank of Captain the next year. The third year he was made a Major; and the fourth a Colonel Putnam and Rogers were the heroes during the last war* Putnam was so justly at a loss when the Indians had killed all his men, and completely hemmed him in upon a river, as to leap into a stream, which in a minute carried him down a stupendous fall, where no living could pass without losing their lives. The Indians reasonably concluded that Putnam their terrible enemy, was dead, and made report accordingly at Ticonderoga; but soon after a scouting party found their account mistaken in a bloody encounter Some few that got off, declared that Putnam, was yet living, and that he was the first son of Hobbamocow, and therefore immortal. However, at length, the Indians shot the terrible warrior prisoner, and tied him to a tree, where he hung three days without food or drink They did not attempt to kill him for fear of offending Hobbamocow; but they sold him to the French at a great price The name of Putnam was more alarming to the Indians than cannon, and the men would not fight him after his escape from the falls He was afterwards redeemed by the English."

* French war—Peters left this country in 1774; and wrote his history in London, in time of the American Revolution. He was a staunch Tory.

WAGES OF AUTHORSHIP. We have received (says the Scotsman) several letters lately from the country, asking if we pay for articles furnished to the paper, and at what rate The questions are so very reasonable that we cannot refuse an answer We may inform our correspondents that, knowing the infirmity of the vates sacer, who is never able to make a prudent use of money, we pay all writers of prose (and we deal only with such) by orders on Mr. Jokelrire, the well known grocer and general furnisher, and at the following rates For a good running anecdote, a pair of calf shoes, for a short epigram, a glass of gin, for a new song, a pound of Gouda cheese; for a sonnet to a lady, a pint of treacle; for one foot or half a column of blank verse, a stone of raw sugar, or a wedge of brown soap, at the option of the writer; for a Pindaric ode, as much cloth as will make a strait waistcoat; for a satire or lampoon on a minister of state, a bottle of Hunt's blacking, the celebrated member for Preston having supplied us with a case of six dozen gratis, for this special service; for a satire or lampoon on a Burgh Magistrate, two salt herrings, or an ounce of kippered salmon; for a libel on the church, a pair of kittens, or a worsted nightcap; for a pasquinade on a former Lord Advocate, a couple of Russian tongues, for a pasquinade on the Lord Advocate for the time being, nothing—inadmissible Other articles in proportion. Articles paid for only when published, and no compensations allowed but those specified

EXTRAORDINARY INSTANCE OF STRENGTH AND SPEED. One of the most extraordinary instances of strength combined with speed that we ever recollect to have heard of took place on Wednesday evening in Dale street In a wine house in that street, a conversation about running took place between a young man employed there and a porter belonging to the Railway Company, who was waiting at the wine house for some packages that had been forwarded by the Railway, when the Railway porter, whose name is Darlington, said he could run 120 yards, with a certain package upon his back, while the young man porter ran 200 without a load. This package contained 120 pieces of prints, weighing about 3 1-4 lbs each, and had been packed in a hydraulic press. A wager was made of half-a-ale and half in money, and preparations were instantly made for the race The package was lowered on the shoulders of the man, and, when properly balanced, off they started, when, to the utter astonishment of several who witnessed the exploit, the man carrying this prodigious load finished his 120 yards when the other, who is by the by an excellent runner, was eight yards from home.—Manchester Courier.

LACONICS.

Great talents renders a man famous; great merit procures a name; great learning respect; but good breeding alone insures love and affection.

The reason of things lay in a narrow compass, if the mind could at any time be so happy as to light upon it. Most of the writings and discussions in the world are but illustration and censure, which signifies as much as nothing to a mind in pursuit after the philosophical truth of things.

Always endeavor to learn something from the information of those thou converest with; and to put thy company upon those subjects they are best able to speak of.

How much pains have those evils cost us which have never happened!

Never expect any assistance or consolation in thy necessities from drinking companions.

The revolution of mankind may, perhaps, be considered a hackneyed and stale subject; still, it is one which may invite the attention of the moralist and the philosopher for ages to come. If we look abroad into the whole world, we see innumerable instances of stern resolve, both in the path of virtue and in that of vice; we see examples of determination in the road of industry, and in the pursuits of frivolity and idleness—on the one hand, we see that leads to ruin in a pecuniary point of view is crowded by sturdy travellers, who will not abandon a favorite chase, although it has led to disappointment by slowly a thousand times.

Resolution is indeed a strange faculty, leading to the highest excellence when directed aright, but conducting to the extreme of guilt when prompted by an evil passion. A fickle character is perhaps the most useless in creation, for when possessed by an upright man, it copes his thought and action, and renders him akin to the imbecile, who acts without motive, whilst belonging to the vicious, it forms the tool for the more hardy villain, and frequently renders its masters the very instruments of crime. "A noble and full pledged resolution" is the attribute of a good and great man; it is content with nothing short of, absolute attainment; disdains the petty impediments that would interfere with a lower sentiment, in its generous exercise, and reaches the height of usefulness and honor Jeremy Taylor has forcibly illustrated this principle by allegory:

"The river that runs slow, and creeps by the banks, and begs leave of every turf to let it pass, is drawn into little hollownesses, spends itself in smaller portions, and dies with diversion; but when it runs with vigorousness and a full stream, and breaks down every obstacle, making it even pass through brass, it goes on without any little avocations, and to creep into holes, but runs into the sea through full and useful channels."

THE WOODLARK.—This bird is about six inches long Its bill is slender; the plumage on the head, neck, and back is of a dark greenish brown, streaked with black; a white streak passes from the bill over each eye towards the nape, nearly surrounding the head like a bandage; the under parts are white, tinged with yellow on the breast, and red on the breast, and spotted with black, The tail is rather shorter than that of other Larks, which gives this bird a less tall and slender shape: the legs are of a dull yellow, the hinder claw very long, and curved.

SCEPTICISM. Philosophy tells us that the motion of the earth is equal to seventeen miles in a second, so that if a man doffs his bonnet to a friend, in the street, he goes seventeen miles bare headed without catching cold Five weeks experience has induced certain people to doubt the assertion. They tell us also, that the earth is two millions of miles nearer the sun in winter than in summer, which we may be true; but if so, it is believed that the sun must be heated with oak and hickory in the summer, and anthracite in the winter.

Joanna Cloe, who was recently rendered notorious by the charge of poisoning her husband, and whose case, while before the court, excited such general interest, expired on Friday afternoon rather suddenly The immediate cause of her decease was a fit of apoplexy. A neighbor went into her residence in Shippen street, on Friday forenoon, and not finding her below stairs, she ascended to the second story, and entered her bed-chamber, where she discovered the deceased, stretched upon the bed, and gasping in agony; she had arisen previous to the attack, and finished her toilet, when she was taken, and cast herself upon the bed, she lingered until late in the afternoon, and expired Her corpse was opened by a physician, but no indication of poison was exhibited in the stomach; her scalp was also removed, and the brain examined, which was found profusely suffused with blood.—Phil. Courier.

Edmund Fanton was tried on the 3d January before the supreme court, held at Fairfield, Conn. on an indictment for assaulting, with intent to kill, two persons named McKenzie and Brown. The defendant, with the help of a Mr. Crocker, purposed to lecture, for lucre, on speculative freemasonry, in a tavern, in the village of Bethel He had hired a room and the stair-way communicating with it, for the purpose; and the persons assaulted, together with others, determined that they should see the show and hear the eloquence "free, gratis, for nothing" Fanton took a stick, a Jackson hickory stick, and belabored the two above named in such wise as to make them unconscious for the time, and uncomfortable afterward He did not deliver his lecture in consequence, and was acquitted by the jury, on the ground that he was defrauding his "person and possessions"

COUNTERFEITS. The public are cautioned against an emission of counterfeit five dollar notes of the Farmers Bank of Troy, letter H payable to G G Clute, and signed Jno. D Dickinson, president, and J. V. Schoonhoven, cashier. Although they are generally very well done, and escape hasty or casual observation, they will not bear a close examination. We heard yesterday of three of these notes which were successfully passed.—Albany Argus

In a storm at sea, when the ship's crew were all at prayers, a fellow burst into a violent fit of laughter. Being reproved for his ill-timed mirth, and asked the reason of it. "Why (said he) I was laughing to think what a blessing the boatswain's red rose will make when it comes into the water"

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

The ship Wm. Byrnes, from Havre, the packet Samuel Robertson, from London, and the packet Pacide, from Liverpool, arrived at this port on Tuesday, bringing Paris dates to the 18th and London to the 20th of December—being many days later than our previous advices.

The Parliament of Great Britain convened on the 6th of December, and the King in person delivered his speech on that day. He commenced with an expression of his regret that they should be called by the exigencies of the times to so early a renewal of their arduous labours; recommends emphatically a speedy and satisfactory settlement of the reform question; laments the distress which exists in many parts of the country, and hopes that measures will be taken to alleviate it; expresses his concern respecting the existence of the cholera in England; states that there exists in some parts of Ireland a systematic opposition to the payment of tithes and seems to desire that some compromise may be effected between the established church and the people, which may prevent any collision in future on the subject of tithes. He then glances rapidly but cautiously over the state of Europe, and his relations with the several courts, and concludes with an expression of his deep regret at the occurrence of those acts of violence and outrage which took place at Bristol and elsewhere upon the rejection of the reform bill, and declares it to be his firm determination to suppress all combinations incompatible with regular government, (meaning the political unions so general in Great Britain,) and to repress all illegal proceedings which endanger the peace and security of the country.

Lord John Russell brought forward the new ministerial Reform Bill in the House of Commons on the 12th. It is substantially the same as that which was rejected by the Lords at the last session. After two days' discussion, the bill passed its second reading by a vote of 324 to 162—being just two to one, and exceeding by 26 the majority for the former bill. Its passage in the House of Lords was considered extremely doubtful, unless the reform party should be strengthened by a new creation of Peers.

A dreadful riot took place at Castle-Morris near Kilkenny, Ireland, on the 11th. A party of forty policemen were engaged in collecting tithes, when they were attacked by a body of the people, consisting of about 2,000 persons, and fourteen of the policemen killed, and four dangerously wounded. Three of the mob were said to have been killed.

The Cholera, though still raging at Sunderland and Newcastle, did not appear to be spreading over the country, as had been feared.

In France, every thing seemed to indicate the permanent establishment of tranquillity under the present government. The Duke of Orleans and Marshal Soult had returned from Lyons to Paris, having been successful in effecting a complete restoration of order and quiet in the former city. M. Casimir Perier, the French Prime Minister, has laid before the Chamber of Deputies a statement of the causes which led to the insurrection at Lyons, and the course which the government had pursued in effecting its suppression. He attributes the disturbance in a measure to a collision between the local authorities and the silk workmen respecting the adoption of a scale of prices for labor, which the authorities had imposed on the workmen without their consent, and which has been abolished by the French government.

Great distress exists in the manufacturing and commercial districts of France, owing to the stagnation of business which the unsettled and precarious condition of political affairs has occasioned.

The king of Holland still refuses to accede to the terms of separation from Belgium, as laid down by the Conference at London. His principal ostensible objection to those articles is the right conceded to the Belgians of using the roads and canals of Holland the same as when the two countries were under one government. It was believed, however, that all difficulties would be settled without a recurrence to hostilities.

Don Pedro, it is stated, is preparing an expedition to wrest the throne of Portugal from his brother Don Miguel. The ex-emperor of the latter had been in Paris, but left on a visit to his son at Lisbon; it is of course a fabrication. He still holds despotic sway over Portugal, and is making preparations to repel the invasion of Don Pedro.

It was currently reported at Paris that disturbances had broken out at Cassel, Neufchatel, and other parts of Germany; and that strong discontent, threatening to break out into rebellion, existed in Italy, especially in the Papal dominions.

TEN DAYS LATER.

By the ship North America, which arrived at this port on the 26 last from Liverpool, we have received intelligence from London to the 30th of December.

The most important information obtained by this arrival is that of the continued existence of the Cholera, which now appears to be spreading with rapidity and increasing in violence throughout all Great Britain. It had reached Wales, and broken out at Gatesshead, on the south side of the Tyne, where 119 persons had been attacked by it within two days. The London Sun, of Dec 29th, thus alludes to this subject:

"The latest accounts respecting the Cholera are most frightful—most appalling! The plague is traversing the north with a giant's speed, and more than a giant's energy. Young and old—the feeble and the strong—the dissolute and the abstemious, all fall before it. It is now at the gates of Edinburgh, at Haddington, where three deaths have already taken place. But at Gateshead the mortality is terrific. The pestilence rages in every quarter of that town, and the inhabitants are completely panic struck."

The Reform Bill has not yet reached the House of Lords, but the prevailing opinion is that it will pass that body without serious opposition. This must, however, be considered very doubtful.

Don Pedro's expedition for revolutionizing Portugal had not yet sailed. He was himself at Paris, where he had been joined by the Marquis of Palmella, the agent of Donna Maria.

A party of Spanish refugees, under the command of General Torrijos, which had sailed from Gibraltar for the purpose of landing in Spain, and attempting the overthrow of the government of Ferdinand VII. were driven upon the coast, near Malaga, by some Spanish vessels, where they were surrounded by a large body of troops, and compelled to surrender. The whole number taken, 53 persons, were promptly put to death.

The government of Belgium has been obliged to borrow nearly $10,000,000 to meet the extraordinary expenses attendant upon the separation of their country from Holland, and its organization as a separate state. It is stated that the loan has been taken by the Messrs. Rothschilds.

The king of Holland still refuses to assent to the protocol agreed upon at London for the adjustment of the Belgian controversy. Disturbances had taken place in the province of Luxemburg, which, as the protocol stipulates, is to be divided between Holland and Belgium. This is expected to render the settlement of the Belgic question still more difficult.

The bill which the French ministry have projected for the abolition of the hereditary Peerage was under discussion in the Chamber of Peers at the last dates. The chief article of the bill was carried on the 27th by a vote of 103 to 67.

The French Minister of Foreign Affairs, Gen. Sebastiani, was dangerously ill, and unable to perform the duties of his office, which in consequence devolved upon M. Casimir Perier.

A great fire had taken place in Liverpool, by which property valued at $200,000 was destroyed.

Pogeny. Mrs Hemans's Poetry scarcely covers the expense of printing. Wordsworth's are not marketable, and Murray has in hand a poem of Crabbe's that he cannot venture to publish.

William Parratt, a sheriff's officer, was lately fully committed from Guildhall, London, on the charge of attempting to kill his wife, from whom he has been separated, by cutting her throat. [illegible] very sorry.

At Eyam, Mr. R. Frost, aged 65, to Miss Margaret Morton aged 18. When, at the altar, the Minister came to that part of the ceremony where the ring is placed on the finger of the bride, the bridegroom seized her hand, in an ecstacy of joy, and exclaimed—"All is over now; no longer Peggy Morton, but Mrs. Frost!" Sheffield Courant

ELOPEMENT. Mr. John Landon, a farmer, 49 years of age, recently occupied South Hayne estate, parish of Cheriton Fitzpaine, eloped last week with the wife of an ether farmer of the same parish, of the name of Brown. Landon has left a wife and three children behind, the eldest of whom is 18 years old; his guilty paramour is the mother of seven children, six of whom she has left behind, taking the seventh (an infant at the breast) with her. Landon rode away for the pretended purpose of paying his half year's rent, the consequence of not doing which was a sale under a distress for rent, which took place last Wednesday when the effects were sold by Mr. Baggage. The guilty parties, it is understood, have gone to Ireland. Exeter Flying Post.

NOVEL DUELLO.—A Paris paper relates as a fact, that two students in Berlin, having quarrelled, agreed to kiss the lips of a person mortally affected with the Cholera, and that the dispute should terminate with the death of either. Each of them kissed the lips of a man in the last stage of the disease, but neither dying within twenty-four hours afterwards, their "mutual friends," declared that they should be reconciled.

A curious case of somnolency occurred lately at Kingsbridge, but week: the servant of a draper, during sleep, leaped from the bedroom, a height of 15 feet, and was found taking her ramble unhurt, and wrapped in the counterpane of her bed.

A TOUGH ONE.—A marriage took place lately, in Ireland, between Wm. Huggard, aged 64 years, and Susan Thompson, aged 18. The bridegroom was sergeant-major of the 16th regiment. He was formerly on the West India station, and while there, buried his entire regiment three times, and acquired the appellation of the "Grave Digger."

Poor Michael Fulham, about sixty years since, fell dead at the door of the Dublin green room, a moment after leaving the stage from having been encored, in the song of "Je ne scai quoi," in Dimond's operatic farce of Brother and Sister. At his funeral, an old Irishwoman, as she saw the body deposited in the grave, said "Ah! poor Mic, you've got your ritr ticket at last."

When General Burgoyne was once at a play, which was most miserably enacted, at a barn in Lancashire, he called one of the performers, and asked him what was the name of the piece. "The Stage Coach, sir," replied Buskin, bowing very respectfully. "Why, then," answered the General returning the bow with the utmost gravity, "you will greatly oblige me by giving me early notice the next time it is performed, that I may be an outside passenger."

Don Pedro, the ex-emperor of the Brazils, and the Grand Duke of Baden, are said to be the most accomplished musicians in Europe. Both of these royal personages perform upon almost every musical instrument, and have composed several works which are extremely popular in the theatres on the continent.

Alexander Von Humbolt is about putting to press the closing volume of his stupendous work on the New World. The whole will form eight and twenty volumes with more than thirteen hundred copper plates. It will present a complete view of the Geography, Natural History, Statistics, and past and present records of the immense regions which have been subjected to his researches.

SINGULAR AND MYSTERIOUS DISCOVERY.—The body of a female elegantly dressed, was washed ashore on one of the Blasket Islands, Dingle Bay, on the 19th ult. She had on a silk gown, a gold chain round her neck, and had several valuable trinkets attached to other parts of her person. The most singular circumstance was that two pointer dogs were found fastened, one to each of the hands of the ill-fated lady. A wreck was perceived on the opposite side of the bay.

During the last spring months the plague entered Bagdad, a city of 80,000 inhabitants, and together with a frightful inundation, took off rising of 60,000 people. On the 1st of May, says a writer who escaped the contagion, the dead were laying about the streets unburied, and the dogs eating with avidity the loathsome food.

Mr. Whitehead, of Liverpool, recently obtained a verdict of £100 against the proprietors of the "Mercury," for having slanderously libelled him in that paper, by stating that the lady with whom he was living unreasonably as his wife, was, in reality, a kept mistress.

We have to record a very tragical occurrence in humble life this week. A family of the name of Carthy is located on a spot in the mountains, near Ardnacrusha. The father, after having a quiet family by his first wife, married a second, which unfortunately was the cause of frequent bickerings between her and the first issue. One of these, a grown lad, suspected the step-mother had given information against his brother, a deserter from the 36th regiment, and went to the father's house on Wednesday evening, when he charged the step-mother with having done so, and from reproaches proceeded to blows. Her cries and appeal for help roused the father's passion; so that forgetting the obligation of a parent, in the more absorbing feeling of interest for his wife, he seized a large knife, which he plunged in the body of his ill-fated son. The young man fell with a deep groan, and expired of the wound on Friday morning. When the son shrieked, his sister came to his assistance; but the exasperated father, in the fury of the moment, drew the knife across the girl's neck and breast, mangling her in a frightful manner. The scene was truly shocking. The daughter is now under respectable medical care and her recovery is expected. The father and wife have surrendered themselves into the hands of the authorities.—Limerick (Ireland) Chron.

A case of breach of promise of marriage was lately tried at Stafford, England—both parties being over 60 years old: verdict for the plaintiff one shilling!

SINGULAR MARRIAGE.—A frail old woman in Calton, aged 75, was on Monday married to a young man, belonging to the same burgh, who has scarcely emerged from his teens. In their courtship, it appears that the widow, who is possessed of ample means, favoured her youthful wooer with £5, to furnish a suit of clothes for the wedding; but having taken some distaste to the match, on its near approach, he decamped, leaving the bride disconsolate. She was not, however to be trifled with; and without delay set off through the country, in search of her betrothed husband, taking his sister along with her to use her influence in wiling him back. The chase was unsuccessful, but the bridegroom at last returned of his own accord, after punishing the sum intended for his wedding suit; and had no sooner appeared, than to fulfil his promise of marriage, which he finally complied with, and on Monday took her to Paisley, where the ceremony was performed, a sum paired with the gratifying information that she would make him the sole heir to her property.

Thomas Bowridge was recently subjected before the High Court of Justiciary for the murder of his wife. The evidence was entirely circumstantial but clear and convincing. It appeared that the deceased had been much addicted to intemperance, and that in consequence she and her husband lived very uncomfortably, the neighbours hearing at times that cries and screams were not unfrequently heard issuing from their dwelling. On the night on which the murder was committed (Sunday 28 Oct.) cries of murder were heard, but as usual were unattended to on account of their frequency. Bowridge was seen looking out of his window a little before the crisis, and coming out of the house a little after them. In a short time an acquaintance of Mrs Bowridge's knocked at the door, but got no answer. She looked through the key hole and saw the deceased lying on the floor. She called again upon which the deceased crawled towards the door, lifted the latch, and then fell down behind it. Witness enquired what had been that to hurt her, she answered "You need not ask that!"—There was no much blood about her face, but her head and breast were bloody and there was blood and water on the floor. She was set upon a chair, but in her stupic more. The doctor of the parish was then being drunk, she had fallen over the [illegible] on her. On the surgeons who attended her stated that a fall could not account for the appearance of the body. They had also taken the precaution to secure a poker, tongs and knife, which were found lying on the floor covered with blood. Blood was also found on the clothes of the prisoner when apprehended that night in a public house in Carubber's close. He was unanimously found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged along with Gow on the 24 Dec.

Government have granted a further sum of £6000 for completing the College buildings at Edinburgh.

TOUCHING THE POCKET.—At a meeting held in the west of England, for the purpose of organizing a Political Union, every thing went on swimmingly, till it occurred to the "wire pullers" to hand round the hat for the purpose of obtaining the wherewith to defray contingent expenses. At the sight of the contribution box the waits of the meeting was entirely destroyed, and shrunk away in independent fractions, leaving Mr Chairman, and a few promoters, to pay the piper. How very natural!

A member of parliament applied to the post of fice to know why some of his franks had been charged? The answer was, "We supposed, sir, they were not your writing. The hand is not the same." "Why, not precisely the same; but the truth is, I happened to be a little tipsy when I wrote them." "Then, sir, will you be so good in future, as to write drunk, when you make free."

LOSS OF THE SULTAN.—An article from Trieste, in a Hamburg paper, gives the following account of the destruction of the Sultan, Capt. Isley.—"The accident arose from the circumstance of two sailors tapping a hogshead of rum during the absence of the master and mate on shore, which took fire and burst. This was at 5 P. M. and the hull went down at 11. She might have been saved if according to the advice of several captains she had been scuttled, and could have been raised at little expense. The harbor master, however would not admit of this, except the American Captain was present. Finally it was attempted to sink her, by firing into her, but the shot was not large enough. If fortunately, there had not been a complete calm, the whole line of vessels would have been in the greatest danger."

LY SHOPLIFTING BY MACHINERY.—It is not generally known, but we understand it to be an absolute fact, that Snoos are manufactured in Deptford, England, by Machinery, and that the government refuses to permit its being further used on account of its throwing the great body of persons belonging to that business out of employment. This makes Forty kinds of Business in which machinery has been introduced. England finds it necessary to check Machinery.—Old Country man.

GENIUS.

Few errors have more generally obtained than that of the innateness of genius; none, we may say, has a more direct tendency to repress the generous ambition of the student, whether in literature or the arts. It has lulled the sluggard, and withered the feelings of many a soul sublime. Mankind are accustomed to think and speak of intellectual superiority as a gift of nature, and treating as inherently in some men as sweetness in the rose, or colors in the sun's rays. We hear them speak of one man as having been born a poet, another a painter; of this one as gifted with a genius for the mathematics; of that one, for invention in the mechanic arts. We believe this doctrine to be erroneous; an error that has originated, probably in the lazy ignorance of those who, with sufficient discernment to discover and wonder at the attainments of others, have had neither the energy nor the ambition to attempt any thing themselves. Those who aspire after literary or scientific distinction must not imagine that genius is the spontaneous product of the intellectual soil; and that time alone, without the aid of diligent study and reflection, will raise them to that rank in the scale of intellectual excellence to which it is their duty, as it will be their glory, to attain. The operations in the mental world, as in the physical, are progressive. Intelligence has its twilight and knowledge its infancy. If some men excel, it is to be attributed to an exalted ambition, persevering application to study, and continued reflection, rather than to any partiality of nature.

"Nature, impartial in munificence,
Is gifted man with all enclosing will,
Mind, with all its transitory shapes,
I am subjected and plastic of two sex,
That, weak from bondage, tremble as they tread.
How many a rustic Milton has passed by,
Stifling the speechless longings of his heart
In unremitting drudgery and care!
How many a vulgar Cato has compelled
His energies, no longer tameless there,
To mould a pin, or fabricate a nail!
How many a Newton, to whose piercive ken
Those mighty spheres that gem infinity
Were only specks of tinsel, fixed in heaven
To light the midnight of his native town"

If what is called genius were an intuitive principle, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to account for the slowness of improvement in the condition of our species. Were the human mind constituted as this doctrine supposes we would naturally expect to find the arts and sciences as ancient as itself, and universally prevailing in almost equal degrees of perfection. But history and the present state of the world are conclusive on this point. Not only have mankind emerged by imperceptible movements out of ignorance and barbarism, but some divisions of them far outstrip the others in the race of knowledge and refinement. We behold nations which once were almost the sole repositories of knowledge, reverting again to a state of mental and physical degradation; while, on the other hand, we see others rising above the political horizon, and taking their places in the constellation of nations, with new accessions of glory. Where are Greece and Rome, with their poets, orators, historians, and statesmen? Have they left no monuments of their power, no effort of their genius—had we no pattern to judge of the Greeks and Romans of antiquity by the Greeks and Romans of the present day, the story of their greatness would have been placed among the ancients of fable. Their examples are sufficient to show that genius may be acquired and lost—that it falls with the liberties of man, or paralyzes in the corruption of manners.

We would not, however, have it understood, in what has been said, that we believe all men to be equally strong and capacious intellects. But, allowing for the accidental differences in the capacities of men, arising from the greater or less perfection of the animal system, we think that measures can put our mental powers on a footing of general equality. Intellectual vigor, we believe, is no more to be considered as inherited from nature—as the birthright of the few—than bodily activity or strength. With a few exceptions, they are both the result of an early, continued, and properly directed exercise of their respective functions. We all know that indolence will enervate the body, it is no less true that mental inactivity will have a like influence upon the mind.

"DOMESTIC HAPPINESS PORTRAYED"

Messrs Editors.—Curiosity led me to procure a copy of a new work and "the moral" lately published by Mr Charles Sealsfield, 30 Fulton street. Although for a long time I have been in a doubting mood in that glorious state, continued even in perusing the contents of this valuable book, I almost changed my mind entirely. It is not my present intention to review, criticise, or even pick the work. I will merely say that I was interested in its perusal, and have seldom found such fascinating, from so many authors at so low a price as in this. It contains the cream of Addison, Johnson, Steele, and other writers of equal eminence, besides several original and beautiful essays from the pens of American authors and author esses, on the subject of DOMESTIC HAPPINESS.

A DOG IN NEED IS A FRIEND INDEED.—An industrious wagoner, residing in Hempstead L. I. whose it was known had saved a considerable sum of money, came to the city a few days ago on his usual tour of business, leaving his wife and child at home, with no other guardian than a great dog. About two o'clock on the first night of his absence, his little family were aroused by a low growling of the animal, which he was kept up to some purpose with his teeth, rising on hinder legs, she thought she saw a form come out of the window, giving the word to her companion, he, nothing, and hastily and the object fled through the casement. In the morning the dog was found secured and covered with blood, and was shot dead on the spot. There was an amount, wanting, and on inquiry received from probable suitors and multiplied shadows of the robbers.

WHO SHOULD WIN.—On Tuesday last, two young men—one of them named John Wesley Dowdle and the other Joshua Young—were apprehended in Cincinnati, O. for fighting in this place on Saturday evening last, under the following circumstances:—They arrived in this place several days before, they engaged in board, and passed under an assumed name and profession. They were well supplied with money, which they were spending freely in the purchase of wearing apparel and other articles, and in the hire of gigs and horses, with which they rendered themselves conspicuous in the country. They conduct had already attracted suspicion towards them, when a young mechanic, who had his eye upon them, found in the course of his observations of the United States penitentiary at Washington, dated Jan. 14th, offering a reward of fifty dollars for the apprehension of Joshua Hobbs, alias John Wesly Dowdle, and Joshua Young, two convicts who made their escape from that prison the preceding morning. The persons of Wilson and Porter, as they called themselves, were exactly corresponded with the description of Dowdle and Young given in the advertisement, that they were arrested and committed for a justice by whom they were committed to prison. On the examination before the magistrate, they were found well supplied with checks, pocket-book, &c and in possession of $53 in money, nearly all of which was in $100 and $50 dollar bills on the bank of the United States, a circumstance which led strongly to the belief that they are the same villains who committed a robbery on the western stage, between Harrisburgh and Hancock on Thursday night last, by which one of the passengers was robbed of $1000 in Assignees, but his trunk, containing these, was left behind, which fact, in connection with other circumstances, led the boys to suspect that it was some one who was in the coach with them. The robbers succeeded in opening the trunk from the boot of the stage.—Pittsburgh Gaz.

AN EARTHQUAKE.—We had little idea that within the limits of this state, an earthquake had been felt so lately as on the last Sunday week. The shock was felt in Ontario county, about midnight, and the houses shaken so violently as to awaken many from sleep, and the inmates terrified at every thing was jumbled together in every person so he. The shock was accompanied with a noise, which was heard at a very great distance, and was so violent as to cause the movable furniture, with the assembled children, to be tossed to the floor, and the earth was perceptibly vibrated by the concussion. The shock could be felt the most violent, in the space of about half a minute, and the rumbling noise continued four or three minutes.

This is confirmed by the Montreal Courier, which observes "A slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city on Sunday night last, at 11 and 12 o'clock. The noise was heard like the shaking of a stone heap, which was heavy, and continued for about half a minute, and was accompanied with an indistinct noise."

A DARING ROBBERY. On the evening of Tuesday, Jan. 24th, about 7 o'clock, a Mr. Wm. Ferrer, a stranger in Philadelphia, was knock-d down and robbed of his gold watch, chain, seal and key, and twenty dollars in money. The circumstances are as follows: Mr. Ferrer stepped into Mr Peter Gallin's, corner of Fourth and Shippen streets, to get something to drink; while there, he discovered something, as he states, not right, and asked the person in the bar if he would protect him. He answered that he could not, when a person stepped up to Mr Ferrer, saying "I live near you, and will see you home;" but instead of seeing him home, he led him to some place on the commons, and there his pretended friend and another person knocked him down, robbed him, and nearly murdered him. They then made off with his watch and money. After a while, Mr. Ferrer got up and proceeded to a house in which he perceived a light, where a woman put him on his way home, and on making the circumstances known to his friends, they immediately called on Mr. Manderfield, Police Officer of the district of Southwark, who, with his usual promptitude and vigilance, with the aid of the friends of Mr Ferrer and Officer Black, soon brought to Justice Black's Office one of the robbers, who, after an examination was committed to prison to await his trial.—Sentinel.

A GOOD ONE.—A person who lately died in this place, and was known to be worth 20 or 30,000 dollars, had some three years ago deposited in the York Bank a chest iron box, which, from its weight and size was supposed to contain gold. The friends of the deceased, upon looking for a will which it was supposed he had left, could find none at the house, and despatched a couple of gentlemen to the bank, supposing it might be in the aforesaid box. The cash, it produced the box with some ceremony, remarking that he was responsible for it, and would not give it up but to persons clothed with proper authority; but as those who came had the key, he would suffer them to look for the will. It was opened, and first appeared some old Deeds on the top,—afterwards a few newspapers, and finally sundry brick bats, nicely rolled in paper, occupied the remaining space. Not a copper was found. The cashier felt it to be a hard case, and "swore a blue streak" altogether. "Well," said the farmer, "I have been taking special care of this box for 10 years past, and now it's all there!"—Rochester.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—Mr Robert M'Lourlin, of Zanesville, Ohio, was killed at the Steam Paper Mill above that town, on the 18th inst. He fell by some accident became entangled in the gearing, and he was drawn up between the drum and ceiling with such force as to cause his death in a very few minutes. He left a widow and seven children to mourn his untimely end.

ANOTHER.—A young man named James Mardon, of Wolfboough, N. H. had his foot entirely severed from his leg by the falling of a tree which he was engaged in cutting down—He was not aware of having received the injury, until he saw the wound, so suddenly was it inflicted.

The Anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns was celebrated in this city on Monday, as usual.

ACCIDENT.—The Philadelphia Chronicle states that a man by the name of Elijah Cook was thrown from a wagon on the Second street road, on the 17th inst., and killed. He was a native of Massachusetts, and had been employed for some years in Mr. McClurmont's manufactory at Centreville, Pa.

BREAKING INTO A JAIL.—Instances frequently occur of prisoners breaking out of jail, but we seldom hear of such an event as the following, from the Louisville Focus:—

The jail of this county was entered last night, with false keys by the aid of some person or persons from without, and six prisoners escaped, for the apprehension of whom $80 is offered.

The Newburyport Herald—In answer to some complaints of the citizens of Newburyport against the selectmen for omitting to offer a reward for the apprehension of the murderer of Mr Page, the Newburyport Advertiser, of the following date, says—"We have no doubt that developments have been made to the authorities fixing the murder on Herrick, the person whose arrest was noticed in our last."

We commend, in justice to the person charged, state the facts in the case; but we may be permitted to say, that such facts were early ascertained, that the selectmen saw no occasion for offering a reward. Great credit is due to the board of selectmen for the prompt, vigorous and efficient measures already taken and still pursued by them, to fasten the crime upon the criminal.

MECHANICS, PA. Jan. 7.

Beautiles of Litigation. A cause was decided at the adjourned court held here this week involving the value of a saw and eight jaws in which ten dollars damages were recovered, while the costs amounted to considerably more than $100. This was literally bringing pigs to a bad market.

A gentleman meeting an acquaintance, whom he had not seen for some time, while expressing his surprise at his absence, he happened to espy a spot of grease upon his coat. The other informed his friend that he had been travelling. "Oh, rejoined the first, you have been to grease (Greece) I perceive, pointing to the spot. The other, to humor the pun, observed that he went a great way for his wit; aye, truly, says he, I found it on the spot.

The Northampton Courier states that an industrious miller in that town lately received an anonymous letter containing a $10 note, requesting him to convert it into lawful money; he is not aware of having been defrauded of that amount.

Mr Jacob Walters, of Fike county, Pa. was killed a few days since by the accidental discharge of a rifle. His brother, Michael Walters, was also much injured, but is now in a fair way of recovery.

HUNTINGDON, Jan. 7.

The extensive works of the Rockbridge Color Chemical Company, took fire on Monday evening last, and were considerable damaged. The loss is estimated at $15,000. The works were insured.

HUNTINGDON.—Mr. John Jackson of Rockingham, Ohio, was bitten by his dog, in October last, and was seized with hydrophobia on the 27th ult. He lay in violent agony thirty hours, when he expired.

LARGE POCKET BOOK.—It is stated in one of the morning papers, that a pocket book, containing forty dollars and a piece of treating Signal, was stolen from 107 Washington street, on Tuesday night.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.—Mr Robert M'Lourlin, of Zanesville, Ohio, was killed at the Steam Paper Mill above that town, on the 18th inst. He fell by some accident became entangled in the gearing, and he was drawn up between the drum and ceiling with such force as to cause his death in a very few minutes. He left a widow and seven children to mourn his untimely end.

The Casket.

"A nosegay of culled flowers, with nothing of our own but the thread that ties them."

The Western papers announce the marriage of Mr. Levi Williams to Miss Nancy Twenty Canoes, of the Tuscarora tribe of Indians.

Now Levi had courted an Indian maid,
A genuine Tuscarora;
And, whether he meant it or not, he said
He had never seen her like before.

Says Levi, the people may laugh if they choose,
But, as soon as I can, I'll have her;
Her portion is generous—"Twenty Canoes!"
At her chieftain sire her father gave her.

So he asked the old Sachem for his consent,
And he asked the old Squaw for her;
And I warrant he pleaded right eloquent,
Through the "Twenty" interpreters.

Then off to a wigwam away in a wood,
Where the priests of that nation reside,
They hurried together, as fast as they could,
And Levi to Nancy was "tied."

But, alas! for poor Levi, he lost his repose,
His fate beats most others "all hollow"—
He's constantly haunted—wherever he goes
The "Twenty Canoes" will follow.

Lord North, while engaged in discussing one of the most serious points of a question under examination, was interrupted by a dog, which had concealed himself under the table of the House of Commons, and now made his escape, running directly across the floor, and setting up at the same time a violent howl. It occasioned a burst of laughter which might have discomfited an ordinary man. But he who knew how to convert the most awkward occurrences to his own advantage, having waited till the row had subsided, and preserving all his gravity, said to the speaker, "sir, I have been interrupted by a new member, not acquainted with the forms of the House—I therefore yielded to him; but as he has concluded his argument, I shall resume mine."

Methusaleh not as old as he might have been.—The London Atlas tells us that "according to one of the Jewish authorities, Methusaleh did not live as long as he might have done, had he attended to good advice, for it is written that as he was sleeping on the ground, when well stricken in years, an angel came to him, and told him that if he would rise up and build himself a house to lie in, he would live five hundred years longer. Methusaleh made answer that it was not worth while to take a house for so short a term!"—and so he died before he was a thousand years old.

A gentleman who had an Irish servant, having stopped at an inn for several days, desired, previous to his departure, to have a bill; which being brought he found a large quantity of port placed to his servant's account, and questioned him about having had so many bottles of wine. "Please your honour (cried Pat) to read how many bottles they charge me." The gentleman began, 'one bottle port, one ditto, one ditto, one ditto.' "Stop! stop! master, (exclaimed Paddy) they are cheating you! I know I had some bottles of their port, but by St. Patrick, I did not taste a drop of their ditto."

FOX-HUNTING.

This, Mr. Editor, was within my recollection, the most popular of our rural sports—and I am not yet, if you will believe it, quite passe, as the Frenchmen say—

I scarcely know how to begin my remarks on this subject. To wind up, ore rotundo, is not in my power, were it within the scope of my design.

My object is rather to convey information, derived from personal and writers of more experience, than to portray, in its genuine colors, an amusement the most healthful and the most innocent that ever thrilled the heart of man. But here you are begging the question, says the dandy small taker, who never rose before the stars sat, to listen to a pack in full cry, or to see it run into their game with a brushed up, well trained, indescribable degree of motion, only to be understood by being seen.

He who has thus heard and seen will admit that all description must fall, at an immeasurable distance, behind the reality. Let him who doubts, rise in time to take an honest solid breakfast, of hominy, sausages, beefsteak and coffee, and on a blood horse, with free spirit and a sure foot, strike a warm drag in time to unkennel at sunrise. But we are "overrunning"—let us "try back."

For reasons that will be hereafter explained, my desire is to contribute to a "revival" of fox-hunting, and the hospitality, the healthful exercise, and the real enjoyment that naturally and inveriably belong to it.

Postponing, for the present, all reasoning and eulogy on its innocent delights, let me draw upon the experience of others, more than my own, for the means to be pursued for enjoying, in the best manner that existing circumstances will admit, that field sport, with which no other will bear any comparison.

There are, on this subject, no writers worthy of regard except the English, and they enjoy that, as well as other field sports, under circumstances so different, as to render so much more ample, and fixtures and appointments so much more complete than ours, that no comparison can be instituted that will run on four legs.

Of all exhilarating manly exercise for pleasure, and of rivalry and excellence in horsemanship, I am persuaded nothing can equal an English foxhunt! Imagine from fifty to one hundred gentlemen in the neatest coats, tight buff or buckskin breeches, and top boots—mounted on hunters sleek, and impatient as their riders for the chase—many of them, horse and rider, able and eager to clear a five-barred gate.

Of all writers on the subject, Beckford and Somerville are at once the most scientific and practical—and as the poetry of the latter is clear, unambiguous and instructive, I shall frequently have recourse to it, without mentioning the imputation of pedantry, or the danger of misunderstanding a subject, which it is his design to treat in a manner to render it familiar to every reader, and in the hope of encouraging gentlemen, on every neighborhood where there is room, to keep a pack of six or eight couple of real good hounds.

On the comparative merits of fox hunting over other sports, Beckford, in his valuable and elegant letters, remarks—"What now other sports can our dwelling, which is full of fine stands? Fishing is in my opinion a dull diversion. Shooting, though it adds a fine game to my dinner, does not allow time for talk, therefore must be considered as a solitary and sedentary amusement compared with hunting, to which we can add as many as we please of the social kind. Hence, after each point, we have a conversation, or some other occasion arises for talking, which affords mutual entertainment. Now, I'm certain, [illegible] the other sports, towards a right understanding of [illegible] nothing is [illegible] like a fox-chase."

Though this sport is now to be regarded as the text book of the chase, yet we must omit what he says on the subject of the kennel, its size, structure, exposure, furniture, &c. as too expensive and complicated, and otherwise inapplicable to our country at the present day; and pass on to what he says in regard to the size and shape of hounds.

He prefers hounds of the middle size, and says that all middle-sized animals are strongest and best able to endure fatigue. "In height," says he, "as well as the color of hounds, most sportsmen have their prejudices; but in their shape there cannot be much diversity of opinion. Some sportsmen boldly affirm, that a small hound will oftentimes beat a large one; that he will climb hills better, and go through cover quicker, while others, are not less ready to assert, that a large hound will make his way in any country, will get better through the dirt than a small one; and that no fence, however high, can stop him. There is a certain size best adapted for business, which is that between the extremes, and such hounds will not suffer themselves to be disgraced in any country. That acute observer, Somerville, thus clearly expresses it—

"But here a mean
Observe, nor the large hound prater, of size
Gigantic, he, in the thick-woven covert,
Painfully tugs, or in the thorny brake,
Torn and embarrass'd, bleeds. But, if too small,
The pigmy brood in every furrow swims;
Mat'd in the clogging clay, panting they lag
Behind inglorious, or else, shivering, creep,
Benumb'd and faint, beneath the sleetcutting thorn.
For hounds of middle size, active and strong,
Will better answer all thy various ends,
And crown thy pleasing labors with success."

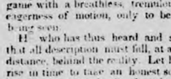
"As far as relates to appearances, to look well, they should be nearly all of a size, and seem as if they belonged to the same family. If handsome withal, they are then perfect.

"There are essential points in the shape of a hound, which ought always to be attended to by a sportsman; for if he is not of a perfect symmetry, he will neither run fast, nor bear much work; he has much to undergo, and should have strength proportioned to it. His legs should have the true and peculiar straightness of nature; his feet should be round and small, his toes bony and narrow, his chest deep, and back broad; his head (contrary to the generally received opinion) should be large. Such young hounds as are out at the elbows, and such as are weak from the knee to the foot, should never be taken in the pack.

"Somerville thus describes what he considers as a perfect hound:—

"See there with countenance blithe,
And with a courtly grin, the fawning hound
Salutes (raw rising), his wide-opening maw
Upwards he curls, and his large star-black eyes
Melt in soft blandishments and humble joy;
His glossy skin, or yellow, pied, or blue,
In lights or shades, by nature's pencil drawn,
Reflects the various tints: his ears and legs,
Flecks here and there, in gay enamell'd pride,
Rival the speckled pard; his rush-grown tail
O'er his broad back bends in an ample arch;
On shoulders clean, upright and firm he stands;
His round cut foot, straight hams, and wide spread thighs,
And his low dropping chest, confess his speed,
His strength, his wind, or on the steeply hill,
Or far-extended plain, in every part,
So well-proportioned, that the nicer skill
Of Pindus himself can't blame thy choice.
Of such compose thy pack."

CATCHING OF HAWKS, EAGLES, &c.—A discovery having been accidentally made of a method of catching hawks, and as these birds make great depredations on our pigeons, partridges, hares, rabbits and other game, gentlemen whose estates are infested by the various species of these birds, may take them in the following simple manner. Ten hawks were caught last autumn, in a cage made upon the plan of the goldinch trap cage, only larger. The bait that decoys them into the trap, is two or more small birds of any kind, but none better than the house sparrow, as they endure the weather better than the others. The hawk-kind are abroad most in dry, fine clear weather; and the cage should be set early in the morning on a hedge, or on some other open place, and left out till late in the evening, or in fine settled weather, all night. They have been taken all times of the day, and in cold as well as clear weather. In rainy weather, these birds do not stir abroad. Those few gentlemen who follow the noble amusement of falconry, may, by this method, supply themselves with hawks of all ages without having recourse to the tedious one of taking them from the nest. I do not see why the larger birds of prey in Scotland, and the adjacent islands, as eagles, &c. &c. which are so destructive to the fawns, lambs, kids, and all kinds of game particularly in the breeding-season, when they bring a vast quantity of prey to their young, might not be taken in a trap-cage, made of oak, and plated with iron, or some other durable stuff and of a size proportionate to such birds.



THE DELIGHTS OF TROUT FISHING

It is common among sportsmen, to sneer at angling as a sort of dull and uninteresting amusement, much wanting in that high excitement, which they say accompanies so pre-eminently, the use of the gun. Now, I have been a sportsman for fifteen years or more, have owned and still own some fine dogs, and as a shot, have not been wholly unsuccessful, but I must say, that in the best day's shooting I ever had, the pleasure has been much less than that derived from a fine trouting excursion.

After a few years practice in shooting, and after a certain degree of skill is acquired it becomes rather a mechanical action to bring the gun to its proper place when the bird is flushed, and the missed shots are generally the result of indolence or carelessness.

But in trout fishing, the excitement never ceases; the difference in the size of the fish—the constant hope of securing a very large one—the varying aspect of the brook—the judgment required in making your casts—and when at last you have succeeded in hooking a heavy fish, the breathless yet restrained impatience with which you play him, now gently pulling on him, again giving way to his impetuous plunges, yet never suffering the line to slacken, until at length he is exhausted, and exulting in your success, you carefully land, man sure, and deposit him in your creel. The man who does not then feel excited, has no sporting blood in his veins.

I consider trout fishing as requiring much more skill than shooting flying, which, by a person of steady nerves, may be acquired to a considerable degree of perfection in one season.

Not so trout fishing; after the long time I have pursued it, I find myself learning something new every year. Some more perfect rod, some new lout, a more killing fly, or some better arrangement of tackle, gives hope of more success in future. Even now, when the ground is as hard as cast iron, covered with snow, and the thermometer below zero, I find myself anticipating the triumphs of the spring, and planning excursions to distant and untried brooks. After all my practice, I cannot repress a certain palpitation of the heart, an increased rapidity of circulation, as on the green banks of some rushing brook, I arrange my tackle," and all my slender watery stores prepare." Then the "Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,

The bridal of the earth and sky."

When every pulse beats with joy, and every inspiration is redolent of health.

The brook commences its course among the hills, now rushing over its stony bed, and now wheeling its dark eddies "by hoary rock and old knowledge tree," then emerging from the forest, it winds its placed course through "meadows trim with daisies pied," and at last loses itself in the echo and impetuous river, preparing the angler, by its much of and aims for that state of quiet contemplation in which every informed mind finds a heaven of rest.—Sporting Mag.

We laid before our readers in the 4th No. of the "Spirit of the Times and Life in N York," Mr. Osbaldeston's Grand Match at Newmarket for 1000 guineas, copied from "Bell's Life in London." Mr. O has since given a new and still more daring challenge, which will be found in our paper of last week, in which he offers to ride with any man in the world, of any age, weighing or carrying his weight, from 200 to 200 miles for £10,000, &c. We regret to observe that in the original report in "Bell's Life in London," there were many inaccuracies, in consequence of which Mr. Osbaldeston has directed the following letter to the Editor of that journal. The 'new challenge' is as lined to this letter, but as it is probably fresh in the memory of our Sporting friends, we thought proper not again to insert it.

Sir,—As I am perfectly confident that a correct and faithful report of my two-hundred-mile match was your only aim and object, I feel certain you will oblige me by correcting a few inaccuracies which appeared in your paper of Sunday last, and will insert the following in your next week's paper.

From your situation in the stand, it was impossible you could be an eye-witness to every particular, and you were consequently indebted to those around the starting post for the accuracy of them; many of whom no doubt came red hot during the match with some news or other. The first inaccuracy I would call your attention to is—"age, 47," whereas I am not 47 by several years. This is of no other moment than it might be the means of losing some persons' money, as bets have been made about my age before, and I have been referred to to decide them. The second inaccuracy is—"that Ikey Solomons made a sly and dropped a little forward, and I fell over his head," whereas after making the turn round the plantation from the stand, assisted by James Robinson and other friends, they stopped short and turned round, "lest I got him off again, and after going about 200 yards more, he made the same attempt again, and finding he was likely to beat among the trees, from having only a snaffle bridle on without a martingale, I threw myself off. He ran back towards the stand, but was caught by some spectators about 200 yards from me. I immediately followed, and remounted. When I came in, I was not at all flurried, but certainly shook from the fall. The third inaccuracy is—that I said "I would bet 10 to 1 nobody did it in the time I did," whereas I observed to one of my friends, who was doubtful about the nine hours, "I'll bet 100 to 1 I do it in the nine hours." There are men, I have no doubt, can do it in the time I did it, and much less, with only one seven stone, if they are to be called men. Many fox hunters and even jockeys, before the performance, thought it impossible to do it in nine hours; but now the same men say any fool may do it. If they are correct, pray what can a sober man do? Double, at least; perhaps no wise man will be fool enough to try!—100 miles in 17 successive hours and 18 minutes will puzzle all the wise men of the east. It is the pace which a man is obliged to maintain, with such short intervals between every four miles, that distresses him, from which the muscles have not time to recover—200 miles in 10 hours would be no performance to talk of; putting on the extra steam of six miles an hour tries the wind and strength. A man riding 11 stone could do it in 10 hours, if a good horseman, sound wind and limb, and with good pluck. Who ever accomplishes it in 8 hours and 42 minutes, riding 11 stone 3 lbs. will find "his stockings tied up higher than he ever had had them tied up before," to use a waterman's phrase. Various rumors have gone abroad as to the sum I won, and great exaggerations exist, some state it to be £10,000. After defraying all expenses, I shall not nett more than £1,800, owing to the supineness and bad advice of my friends they would not exert themselves for me, nor would they allow me to back myself "in the ring," because, they said, I should spoil the betting, and, if I would only be quiet, they would get plenty on for me. I followed their advice, but they never bet a shilling for me, but kept humbugging me to the last—"It was all right." They knew I would have bet 3, 4, and even 5 to 1 on a match two nights before, and kept me quiet to fill their own pockets at 6 to 4, which they did pretty handsomely, at my expense. I never was afraid of any thing but sudden indisposition, and at no one period of the match would I have taken 10 to 1 about the nine hours, I had time enough to dine with the Lord Mayor of London, and do it in ten. My friends' advice to keep quiet was something like the advice given to Dawson, who was executed for poisoning the horses at Newmarket. They persuaded him a pardon was close at hand, even up to the moment of his execution, merely to keep his mouth shut, as "dead men tell no tales," they say. I forgot to mention in the inaccuracies that Stromlet and Skimisher were the last two horses I rode, not Dungeon and Liberty, as mentioned in your report. I must now apologize, Mr. Editor, for having taken up so much room in your valuable paper, but having been pestered to death by so many inquiries about the match, and having been chaffed so much about a jockey doing it in eight hours, I thought it best to put a complete statement in the paper, and also to add the following challenges to the whole world, out of which one at least, I should imagine, may be selected for their adoption. I have named large sums, because in any attempting or accomplishing any of them I should incur a great expense, and risk my health and stamina, and it is not worthy my money for less. I address myself to all the sporting men of England, and surely as a body they can "stump the ready" against me alone if they think it a good "catch." Should no man or body of men come forward to take up any of my offers, I trust I shall not be bothered with "It is nothing to do—an old woman can do it—and a jockey can do it in eight hours," and so on. I merely back myself on my own stamina and determination; and a man of my age challenging all the world to back a man of any age against me is unparalleled in the history of any sporting, and hardly to be believed. I will however appear at the scratch whenever called upon, both with the needful and my own carcase ready for the "fray."

GEORGE OSBALDESTON.

Pittsford, Wednesday, Nov 16.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE SPIRIT OF THE TIMES AND LIFE IN NEW-YORK.

In undertaking the publication of a paper, devoted, as this is designed to be, to the pleasures, amusements, fashions and diversions of life, the subscribers have been animated by the persuasive encouragements and gratuitous promises of support, of many of the most influential, enlightened and respectable members of the New-York community. It is, to a certain extent, a field unoccupied by others, and one which is deemed important to be filled. For while the politicians, the theologians and the literati of our country have each their separate oracles which (like that at Delphos) proclaim aloud and defend their several opinions and interests; the cause of fashion, of pleasurable entertainments, of taste and recreation, find but few publications of a periodical kind, appropriated solely to their encouragement and support. To paint "life as it is," without the artificial embellishments of romance; to speak of its propensities for enjoyment, its appetite for pleasure, and indulgence, and its tendency to enter into occasional follies, is to do what many must approve, and no one can condemn. For it is certainly no more improper to record the acts of men, than to promulgate them orally to the world. "Pleasure," says a noble Frenchman, "is the chief business of life;" and however seemingly incorrect the maxim may be in the estimation of some, yet it is literally true: for the devotee certainly takes pleasure in the exercise of his religion, the merchant and mechanic in their several branches of employment, and the man of letters in his books: while the sportsman who chases the hare, or attends the ring or the race, is only pursuing pleasures in congeniality with his natural or cultivated taste.

In presenting this new candidate for favor and patronage to the public, it is the intention of the publishers to render it as interesting as possible, and to please all if they can, without wounding the feelings or disturbing the prejudices of any.—The language will be always chaste, so that the most delicate may approve. The paper will treat of FASHION, TASTE, and SCENES OF REAL LIFE, gathered from the every day exhibitions of the world. THEATRES, MUSEUMS, and other fashionable places of resort, will receive appropriate notices, while the SPORTS OF THE TURF, the RING, the PIT, of the FISHER and the FOWLER, will engross no inconsiderable portion of attention. The proceedings of the COURTS, civil and criminal, will as far as possible be given, when matters of interest occur; and more especially those of the POLICE, where Life in all its forms and colorings is so faithfully portrayed. It is also the intention of the editors to devote a considerable portion of each paper to the compilation and dissemination of the news of the day, in a summarial form, which will serve as a brief and faithful record of all important passing events, condensing a large mass into a comparatively small compass.

With these intentions, fully and fairly proclaimed, and with the most perfect good feelings towards all our co-laborers in the same vocation, we present ourselves before an enlightened community as candidates for their patronage and smiles. TERMS—Three Dollars in advance.

JAMES HOWE.

PROSPECTUS.
TO THE PUBLIC.

THE circulation of "SYLVESTER'S REPORTER, COUNTERFEIT DETECTOR, & NEW-YORK PRICE CURRENT" has far exceeded the anticipations of the Proprietor, it being widely extended through every State and Territory in the Union, also in Upper and Lower Canada, and the West India Islands—it is proposed to enlarge it to the imperial size, on the commencing of the first No in January, 1832.

In addition to a large portion of miscellaneous and literary matter, original and selected, it will contain much useful and valuable information, not only to professional and mercantile men, but to the farmer, the mechanic and the laborer. A complete and correct list of all the Broken Banks in the Union will be given, together with an account of all the latest Counterfeit Notes in circulation. Also the price of the bills of the various branches in the U. S. designating the discounts at which they are received in this city. It will contain the "Prices Current" of the New York Market, corrected weekly, the value of the Stock of all the Banks, Insurance, and other incorporated Companies; the prices of gold, silver, and the various rates of Exchange with the principal commercial cities of Europe. Every No will also contain a detailed statement of all the Authorized Lotteries under the management of Messrs Yates & McIntyre, with their days of drawing, prices of Tickets, list of Prizes, and the numbers of each Lottery as drawn.

The subscription price of the paper will be Two dollars and fifty cents per annum, payable in advance; and from the fact of its very extensive circulation, and great number of copies sent to distant subscribers, it is confidently believed to be a valuable vehicle which to persons of every grade may advertise their different avocations.

Advertisements for any period of time will be conspicuously inserted on reasonable terms, and no pains or expense will be spared to make it an interesting, valuable, and useful paper.

S. J. SYLVESTER.

DENTISTRY

Dr. I. Francis,

SURGEON DENTIST, 93 Chatham street, between Duane and Pearl streets, New-York, respectfully informs the Ladies and Gentlemen, that he continues to practice in all the various branches of his profession, from the setting of a single tooth to a full set. He cleans, divides, and fills hollow teeth in the neatest manner, and warrants his Infusible Gold to be completely efficacious in curing the diseases of the gums, fastening loose teeth, preserving those that are carious from further decay, and is a certain cure for the tooth ache. His Pure Metallic Incorruptible Teeth are a real miracle of nature, and having passed the ordeal of fire in making them, they do not absorb the saliva so as to become offensive either to the taste or smell; no particle of food can adhere to them, so the breath remains sweet. The incorruptible teeth retain their color, beauty, durability, polish, strength and beauty not surpassed by any. He also sets Artificial Human Teeth which cannot be distinguished from real, and will perform every motion of the eye, while at giving the sight not pain. Those wishing to have him with their commands, will find his charge a mod rate. Terms positatended to every morning, from 7 to 8 o'clock, gratis. dec 24 1y

Dr. S. Baker & Sons,

DENTISTS....177 Broadway

GOOD set of Teeth identifies health, cleanliness, and a good mouth, is the advantage of speech, and to keep the form of the mouth in its natural shape. It is disagreeable to have a person take a chance a pace or two from us, while talking with us, or shift their seat in a stage, or in company, on account of the smell from their teeth. Therefore teeth should be washed with warm water at night, for food or meat that lies between or about them by morning, makes the mouth taste badly and breath smell badly. People eat breakfast and dinner, and no one can tell a piece of an with cold water that has butter on it. If the tartar has so accumulated on the teeth, you cannot wash it off without injury to the teeth and gums, apply to a well experienced dentist, and let him take it off, and keep your teeth free from tartar, a very little attention will keep them healthy, white, and sound.

The subscribers practice embraces all operations on teeth, and the insertion of teeth, from one to a full set, so accurately that they will have the appearance of natural teeth. Thousands of fine teeth rot, and are finally lost, by neglect or prejudice.

All teeth shall be set on the best and most approved method, and teeth cleaned, plugged, polished, &c. with the greatest care and professional skill.

Also, a number of entire sets of teeth on hand, of different sizes, and made of the best materials; and we challenge the world to produce handsomer teeth, better polished, or set better in the mouth. For a dentist to advise people respecting their teeth is very difficult; for many directly think that he advises for his own good, and not for the good of their teeth, and in this way, and by neglect of parents, millions of teeth begin to rot before the child arrives at the age of fourteen years.

JOB PRINTING of every description neatly and expeditiously executed at this Office

S J SYLVESTER, 130, Broadway,

KNOWN as the ever and always lucky, would remind his friends and the public at large, that he is regularly licensed by the several states in which he has offices, to vend authorized lottery tickets, all of which are the original—those persons purchasing of him, will be protected from fraud or imposition.

The general satisfaction Sylvester has hitherto given, and the liberal patronage he has received from all parts of the Union will but stimulate him in his exertions to meet the wishes of his friends, and if attention, punctuality, dispatch, and the strictest honor, will insure him the continuance of their favors, he feels confident of obliging them and he proudly refers to the past as a guarantee for the future. All those who are not already acquainted with Sylvester can refer to the very first houses in every section of the country, also to the respectable managers, Messrs Yates & McIntyre.

In another advertisement it will be seen that S. J. S attends as usual to the exchange and commission business; letters will meet with the same attention as on personal application. Those who remit funds, without naming any particular class, will have tickets in the fair good scheme.

☞Orders must be addressed in all cases to S. J. SYLVESTER, 130 Broadway, N. York, Pittsburgh, Pa, Baltimore, Md, Paterson, N J.

N B. To save postage, those that request a certificate of the tickets will be sent and the same will be lodged in the Bank subject to the order of the purchaser. This mode of late has met with much success.

☞No connection with any other person in the city and no one has permission to solicit orders in my name.

Tattersall's, 446 Broadway.

THE public are respectfully informed that this popular establishment still continues in "the full tide of successful experiment." Carriages new and second hand in endless variety can be seen and bought from the Coach-makers—Horses kept at Livery in the best possible manner, faithful grooms, pure water, and good feed.

The RIDING ACADEMY under the immediate superintendance of Mr. Elph is open for the winter season, and made comfortable by stoves. Ladies have the opportunity of selecting the hours most convenient to themselves.

BLYTH & WATSON,
22 Dec. 1831. Tattersall's, 446 Broadway.

To Printers and Publishers.

THE subscriber's expectations having been more than realized in the sale of his LIGHT FACE PRINTING TYPE, he takes this opportunity of returning thanks for the favours received. He hopes by the exertions made and now making of being out new assortment, which may be depended upon for service, as well as in Stereotyping and Printing, that his Typographical Brethren, and Publishers, will find it beneficial to themselves to continue their patronage.

A new and complete series of Alphabets, from Agate to English, NEW STYLE, (hair lines rather stouter than any heretofore got up in this country,) are now in a state of forwardness, Agate, Minion, Brevier, and Long Primer, are complete, impressions of which can be seen on application; this style of type is more particularly calculated for Newspaper Printing.

The demand for the subscriber's Type, and Stereotype, has been so extensive, that he has been induced to enlarge his establishment by an additional building—so that he is now prepared to execute the most extensive orders in either line, with much greater facility than heretofore; and on as favourable terms, as to credit, &c. as are offered at similar establishments.

Type which has only been used in stereotyping, most generally on hand, and can be furnished on short notice at a reasonable rate to those who may prefer it.

Every article made use of in the Printing line, furnished to order, at manufacturer's prices.

Musical Instruments, &c.

CHARLES G. CHRISTMAN, Manufacturer of Musical Instruments, having taken the Front Store, and fitted up handsomely, exhibits Accordions, Kent and Pocket Bugles, at the Annual Fair of the American Institute, offers for sale the following Instruments, which are not surpassed by any in the Union: Patent Flutes of the newest improvement, Patent Flageolets, Fifes, Clarionets, Flageolets, double Flageolets, Bassoons, Bass Horns, Serpents, elegant Para Horns, Kent Bugles, common Bugles, Trombones, Trumpets, Drums, Tambarines, Turkish Cymbals, Bass Drums, Violins, Violins, Hand Organs, new patent Accordions, Mouth Harmonicas, with instructions in Spanish and English, and a general collection of Piano Forte Music at half price.—Instruction Books for all kinds of instruments, and Music for all kinds of wind instruments. All kinds of instruments tuned and repaired. The subscriber would particularly direct the attention of the public to his newly invented patent Accordeon, an instrument played on by the hands, and with the greatest motion emitting the most complete harmonious and beautiful tones, in the 6, 7 and 9 keys, and on it may be executed the most difficult pieces without effort. He hopes that the public who have heretofore been very liberal in patronizing him, will still continue to stop at 208 Pearl street, and made comfortable by a supply of first rate Mucool Merchandize in the most liberal terms. He has just received a supply of first rate Roman Violin Strings, at the lowest prices. dec 10 tf

TO THE EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS OF NEWSPAPERS.

JONATHAN ELLIOT, of the city of Washington, respectfully requests the Editors or publishers of Newspapers well in the several States and Territories of the Union, to furnish him, through the Members of Congress of their particular States or Districts, at the Seat of the Federal Government with three copies of their Newspapers marked "one" "two" and "three" issued on for about Wednesday, the 22d of February, 1832 (being the Centennial Anniversary of General Washington.)

As his motive is entirely disinterested and patriotic in making this request, it being his desire to produce positive evidence of the number of Newspapers printed in the United States and their territories, he desires that particular attention may be paid to this request, and above, by the publishers of country papers in distant towns, that are, comparatively little known, and if, at the same time, they would communicate in their papers any statistical information relative to their immediate neighborhood, it would be highly appreciated and gratefully acknowledged.

It is intended that every newspaper received, shall be carefully preserved and arranged, by States, in a room at Washington, devoted for this object; one set to be eventually deposited in the Library of Congress; the duplicate set to be transmitted to C. Rice, Esq. of London, (Agent for the purchase of Books, &c for the Congressional Library) to be by him placed in the British Museum, and the triplicate set to be retained for some public institution.

It is intended, also, as soon as this collection is completed, to publish in a tabular form, in the public prints, for the information of the people of the United States, a list of all the Newspapers, embracing the name, place, and periodical publication, and terms of subscription. Great pains will be bestowed to make this list (being an important result to be gathered from the collection) as perfect as the material will admit.

☞It is hoped that the intelligent conductors of Newspapers favorable to the above project, will oblige the subscriber by inserting this communication in their respective papers, to each of whom a copy of the tabular statement, will be transmitted, as soon as published. j14

Gold Balances.

PERSONS in the habit of purchasing English Gold, are informed that the subscriber has just imported some superior BALANCES; they are very small, and particularly correct. Banks should never be without them. They will weigh Sovereigns and Halves, also Guineas, Halves and Thirds. S. J. SYLVESTER
